According to one observer in Washington the immediate cause of the spreading light as seen from that city is the rising sun of Germansy; and there can be no doubt that the restoration of full German sovereignty and the speedy moves towards the mobilizing, arming and equipping of a German army, have given the United States Government, for the first time, confidence in the capacity of western Europe to play an elfective part in keeping the balance even between Communism and the Democracies. It is why Mr. Dulles was able to say before leaving for Paris last Friday. "I truly believe that our meetings in Paris, where we will welcome a newly sovereign Germany into the Atlantic alliance, will begin the writing of a new chapter in the European at 0 r y." It is a chapter dear to the American heart and insufficiently comprehended by certain European countries themselves. It believes the old Europe of competitive and warring sovereignties to be dead and a new, unified Europe to be rising in its place. It believes in a new, European Germany and it believes in Franco-German reconciliation and cooperation as the heart and soul of a unified Europe. The fact that these beliefs are based on common sense do not, of course, make them any easier for some Europeans to accept. National memories have their own kind of sense. In any event, the great question at the moment is not whether a their present stage of development, they can be reconciled with Soviet Russia's ambitions, hopes are feart; ambitions, hopes are feart, and when the political heads of the three western Powers meet with Marshal Bulganin.
